Electrical Safety for the Homeowner... What to Look For to Keep Your Home Safe

In 2011, the National Fire Protection Association reported that due to electrical failure or malfunction in the home, there were an estimated ...

- 47,700 house fires
- 418 deaths
- 1,570 injuries
- $1.4 billion in property damage

So when homeowners ask how to keep their home and family safe from potential electrical fires, we suggest a routine electrical safety checkup to identify any electrical hazards that might be present.

Some things to look for are...

- Outlets or switches that are hot to the touch, discolored or making crackling or buzz sounds.
- Cords that are cracked, frayed, pinched by furniture, or underneath rugs.
- Reoccurring tripped breakers or blown fuses.

Be sure to call on a professional electrician for service if any of the above listed problems are found. Greenwave cares about your safety and well being and would be more than happy to ensure that your home is safe from any risk of an electrical fire.
